Esther Freud comes from some serious pedigree - her father is the painter Lucian Freud, and Sigmund Freud was her great-grandfather. There's a wistfulness to her writing that I just love. Her protagonists often tend to be soul searchers who are looking for a combination of the right soul mate and their perfect corner in the world.

Mysteries under an open Suffolk sky - once you've got your bearings. Esther Freud's new novel, The Sea House, is set in Walberswick, a village on the Suffolk coast, and may be read as a peaceful companion piece - or even an antidote to those of a fearful disposition - to Julie Myerson's Something Might Happen, a stunning frightener of a novel, set only a short ferry ride away, in Southwold.
